

OSINT HIGHLIGHTS

By your favorite deadly flower, Oleander

What's funny is that the challenge name should've been written with emojis to provide a better hint at the Manhattan project:

   $\sin(\theta)/\cos(\theta)$

But you know what's funnier?

YOU

No....really some of y'all are super creative...and so down bad ngl 🥲...

Hello Camila [redacted],

How are you?

I usually ask my students to send me nicely written emails as per Concordia's standards. Your email has indeed bamboozled me. How can I help you?

If you need accomodations for this week's @hack midterm, please contact me on Moodle.

Hi professor,

I hope you're doing well. I'm currently in Montreal for the weekend, and I was wondering if you'd be open to meeting outside of college to discuss my growing interest in physics. Coming from a different field, I'd love to get your insights on the best path forward to deepen my understanding and possibly contribute meaningfully to the field.

If you're available, I'd be happy to meet at a place of your choosing whenever it's convenient for you. Let me know what works best!

Looking forward to your thoughts.

Best regards,
Manav

Mar 1, 2025, 5:29 PM (3 days ago)

I am well, thank you for asking.

Manav, I am concerned. If you keep travelling and skipping my classes you will not gain enough knowledge to pass this course.

Although, I am flattered by your very kind words. Please note that I am in no way mad at you. I would love to discuss Physics with you!

Yet, according to Concordia's policy, I am not allowed to have teacher-student relations outside of the campus.

I will be free, however, to meet with you at my office tomorrow at noon. For the love of Physics (as my dear friend Prof. Walter Lewin says) please meet me to discuss!

Moreover, I heard that there is a competition called @hack happening at Concordia. Would you kindly let me know if the food there is recommendable: I would love to document this on my blog.

Keep staying interested in Physics, Manav.

Best,

Prof. Astra

Dear Zaid Minhas,

Is your email directed to me or to my colleague Prof. Dexter?

Furthermore, I would like to schedule a meeting with you Zaid, for I am deeply concerned. You have been skipping my classes on numerous occasions for your club (SCS? CSS? whatever the name is). I want you to succeed in this course, but your lack of interest. I am not certain if you will be able to do well in our upcoming 80% ponderation midterm.

Please, come see me after class or during my office hours.

P.S. I heard that another Concordia club (I forgot their name) is hosting an @hack competition. Would you mind letting me know if the food there is good: I would love to document that on my blog :).

As always, stay curious.

Hello Professor Astra,

I attended your lecture last week for PHYS242 when you brought up a very good chicken parmesan you had recently had. I really want to make it at home for my siblings, and I've been thinking about it ever since. Do you have a copy of the recipe you could share with me?

Dear Rowan Snow,

How are you?

I am glad you enjoyed my culinary commentary! The chicken parmesan is a recipe my wife found on Ricardo Cuisine's website. Let me know how it goes next week after class (or you can send me an email).

As much as I appreciate your participation in my class and your enthusiasm for my sharing of food adventures, Rowan, I must say that I am concerned.

You haven't attended your Tutorials for the past two weeks, and you have sent me an email really late. Rowan, please get some sleep: we have a 80% ponderation midterm tomorrow and your brain requires a good night's rest.
